L.E.A.D.S. is an organized effort led by the Medical Association of Georgia (MAG) and its affiliated medical societies, sections, and adjuncts help medical students across the state increase their engagement in organized medicine and advocacy. This program is designed to achieve this without creating additional financial burdens or distractions from their education or training.

Program participants, L.E.A.D.S. Scholars, learn skills and participate in experiences that will prepare them to become leaders in the next generation of advocates for the medical profession while bolstering their resumes, expanding their peer and professional networks, and becoming better equipped to successfully transition into practice.
